Padideh Ahrarnejad is an award-winning tar player, arranger, composer, and educator who has brought Persian music across Europe, the Middle East, North America and Asia. A graduate of the Tehran Art Music School and the Art University of Tehran, she studied tar with leading figures of Persian music. She was a member of the Iran National Music Orchestra and the Radio and Television Orchestra; performed with the Simorq Orchestra, an all-star group dedicated to acquainting the public with Iranian culture; and was a featured soloist on legendary Iranian composer Hossein Alizadeh's album, "Young Artists" (Honarmandan-i Javan). Since emigrating to Toronto in 2016, Padideh has been a member of Kuné, "Canada's Global Orchestra," a group of elite players from different musical traditions organized by the Royal Conservatory of Music.

Golrokh Aminian (Khodabandehlou) is a trained soprano who started her music education as a child by learning to play the violin. She studied vocal techniques in Iran and was a member of the choir. Later on, Golrok took on the position as a lead soprano in the Roudaki Hall of Tehran before moving to Canada and continuing her vocal training in Toronto at the Royal Conservatory of Music. In 2015, she co-founded, together with Amir Rahbar, "Cultural Interchange - 360," a not-for-profit organization aiming to create a cross-cultural bridge between people of different cultures through music and other performing arts.

Naghmeh Farahmand is a Persian percussionist. She is also skillful in playing Darbuka (Doumbak), Dayereh, Cajon, Udu, and Drumset. In 2010, Farahmand moved to Canada and started working with various genres of music, including the music of Arabian, Bulgarian, Turkish, Indian origins, and Jazz. Here she released her first CD, "Unbound," followed by CDs "A Tale of Two Cities" and "Refuge." Active on the Toronto scene, she has appeared with the Tafelmusik Orchestra, the Toronto Consort, the Amici Ensemble, and David Buchbinder's production of "The Roots of Andalucia." Alongside teaching at various international establishments and masterclasses, Farahmand has published a book, Helheleh.
